

Felina's scrawls 4

Cuura was found by Kendalan...

Meanwhile the rest of us were watching the waterfall. We have seen nobody entering or leaving.

We made our camp a little further, with a small view on the water. The next morning we had a little difficulty deciding what to do. The result was Grimwald and I were going to scout the opening behind the waterfall while the rest stayed outside as backup.

On the way down, Grimwald put aside his sceptics against magic and he was able to move with the grace of a cat. I was moving with the grace of a spider, so I could peek inside the entrance behind the waterfall where they didn't expect it. There was at least one creature watching. My magic put it asleep though. Now it was safe for Grimwald to use the stone path and enter.

Apparently there were four orcish guards. They were all sleeping. The entrance was the beginning of a tunnel, leading to a cavern. This cavern floor was covered with debris from what once were doors. Wooden poles supported the ceiling. It didn't look really safe. Further down the tunnel there was the noise of a large group of humanoids talking. Not good..... Time to go.

Still we had to find evidence the caravans were here. Maybe if we could find the main entrance or trails leading there....

We moved over the hill and luckily we found a trail of blood... according to the ranger who could tell from the groups of snails living there...

We even found hard evidence: a pin from a wagon.

At last..... back in town. A good bed, decent meals, a warm bath, a massage and money. Our employee paid us for the last days. Some bard type paid for the head of what they called ettin.

And there was more... they hired some adventurers to get rid of the orcs. Up to us to lead them to the caves. The sneaky lady easily found the way to open the main entrance. Then the sorcerer did massive destruction. So rude, so smelly, so conspicuous, so useless. I do not think I will ever use magic like those fireballs..... Now they have to follow orcs to find out where the leaders are. The use of proper magic would have revealed it more easily. Well, they did it as Tempus wants it...according to the priest

Now they leave us with the mess.
