Chapter 2: Survival against the odds

That orc had a bow, the halfblood Felina had not. She however had no training. How does she survive? I can improve that bow, but why did I not bring my gear for that? Again no trail to be followed. Are orcs becoming more woodcrafty?

I searched for tracks during the day. How come these orcs are so careful? Not orc led – that much is clear. At dusk the dwarf Grimwald wanted to be underground. Why? We found a nice copse, but the halfblood Felina pointed out that somebody had been ambushed here. The dwarf found a item of some human deity. Humans died here?

Everybody is tired so I selected a Claw Thorn bush. Why don't they know how to enter? And that the inside is safe? We slept in watches, nice and comfy, until I awoke from falling metal. Do dwarves actually know what 'silent' is?

Everybody woke up, and I led them away: those scouts will return. Far to soon we heard sounds of pursuit, and the dwarf led them strait to us. Does he really feel the need to fight those orcs so bad? They talked about battles, but I just climbed a tree to have a better shot and more cover and secured myself. The warrior and the strange woman were the only to stay together.

One shape of the enemy was biggest. Who else would be boss? So I suggested to fire arrows and those ungainly crossbows at it. They listened, how unexpected. But the creature is hardly and absorbs many darts. What is it? Two headed?

Felina used sleep on some goblins – why do they fall for that? - as a few of us kept on shooting the leader. Those orcs brought javelins, and I need to use the tree as cover, I shot at that two headed brute again, then piercing pain and blackness?

I came to with the taste of some strange liquid in my mouth. What was it? The familiar woman had given me a potion of sorts, healing my wounds. I must have been close to loosing the connection between my body and soul, but now... how do I feel?

We have won the battle, all of us still alive. What unseen power is there in these people?
